1 Introduction

This report attempts to analyze the correlation between time, measured by the number of cours since the first cour of 1980, and the score of anime, gathered from the anime database and community website, MyAnimeList.net.

1.1 Background

 $\lceil \gamma = \lambda \rfloor$, romanized in the Hepburn system (a system for the romanization of Japanese using the Latin alphabet¹) as "anime", is defined in the Merriam-Webster English Dictionary as "a style of animation originating in Japan that is characterized by stark colorful graphics." Some scholars suggest that it may not appropriate to refer to "anime" narrowly as an art style, but rather generally as animation created by Japanese artists within a Japanese context. In general usage, the word may be used to refer to a single production, a plural number of productions, or the medium as a whole. In this study, the word "show" may also be used to refer to a single anime production.

There is no single definition of which productions may be classified as "anime" because the meaning of the word in the Japanese language describes all forms of animated media. Some scholars suggest that the term can be used to refer not only to animation from Japan, but also animated media from other nations. Others strictly limit the classification of anime to only Japanese animation.

Discussion has been published regarding effect of anime consumption by international audiences in amplifying understanding and consideration across cultures.⁴ Price discusses how exposure to anime internationally has sparked and furthered cross-cultural interest. With the expansion of the internet, access and exposure to anime has increased, and many websites have developed as hubs for the gathering of millions of viewers across the globe.

One such website, MyAnimeList.net (referred subsequently as simply "MyAnimeList"), is an English-speaking anime and manga database and community founded in 2006 by Garrett Gyssler.⁵ The website maintains a database of professionally produced animation from Japan, Korea, China, or a mixture of those three nations. Independent works may be added if they pass certain qualifications. The database does not include live-action productions, trailers or advertisements, foreign versions of anime, or titles that have not been confirmed to exist.⁶ The anime in the MyAnimeList are the anime considered in this study.

The database contains a wide variety of information on each title, including synopses, background information, the genres of entertainment it might be considered to belong to, information about the producing studio(s) and domestic and international licensors, official artwork, per-episode information.

A particular property of interest is the "season" the anime first premiered in. In consideration of TV anime releases, the term "season" or "cour" may be used in reference to approximately a single quarter, or thirteen weeks, of the year. The quarters correspond in general timing and name to the four natural temperate seasons. Most TV anime follow the schedule of weekly releases beginning on the first or second week of the season. The Winter season corresponds with the months of January, February, and March; the Spring season corresponds with April, May, and June; and so on. For example, Winter 2020 began shortly after the New Year in the first week of January 2020. All one cour-long (usually comprised of twelve episodes) will likely finish airing by the start of Spring 2020, which will begin at the start of April 2020. Some shows may begin release in special premieres before the start of the season, but since most of the episodes air within the season, the show is considered to premiere in that season.

Registered users on the MyAnimeList platform may add anime that they have watched or plan to watch on their personal list. Adding anime they have watched typically entails the attachment of an arbitrary, unitless score to that particular title. This score must be an integer from 1 to 10, inclusive, where 10 typically means that the user regards the show as a masterpiece, and 1, that the user regards the show as part of the lowest tier of anime. Users may also post a review for the show describing the rationale for the score they assign. MyAnimeList calculates and displays an aggregate score for each anime, a decimal value rounded to two places when displayed, based off user scores, the number of users who have scored the title, and a number of other variables.⁷

2 Data

The population considered consists of all the anime in the MyAnimeList database that satisfy the requirements outlined below. The Jikan API,⁸ a public, unofficial MyAnimeList JSON API, was queried by a script to retrieve and automatically filter anime data from MyAnimeList. The final population set has 5315 titles.

The data set analyzed is a simple random sample of 2000 anime selected from the population. For these anime, the relationship between time, the explanatory variable, and MyAnimeList aggregate score, the response variable, is examined.

2.1 Format

Time is considered in units of seasons. In the data, the premiere season for each show is represented as the number of seasons since Winter 1980. For example, Spring 2011 would be represented by the number 125.

The aggregate score value is the same hundredths-rounded decimal displayed on MyAnimeList.

2.2 Requirements

Aggregate score The listing must be given an aggregate score. Listings with no aggregate scores are filtered out. MyAnimeList omits aggregate scores for anime that fail certain requirements. These include shows that have not yet been released or are rated R18+. The score of t

Airing status Anime that have not finished airing are not included. Scores are likely to fluctuate as the show is airing and usually stabilize after users input their final scores.

Number of scores The listing must have been scored by 1500 or more users. This is to include only shows exposed to a sufficiently significant audience.

2.3 Sampling Process

Each of the anime in the population was assigned an integer identifier from 0 to 1999 in order of MyAnimeList rank, separate from the existing MyAnimeList database identifier. 2000 unique integers in the range [0,1999] were generated using a random number generator. Those anime whose assigned identifiers matched the generated integers were chosen to be included in the sample. The sampling process was performed in a script.¹¹

2.4 Limitations

Consideration of the data as a real reflection of the MyAnimeList userbase's opinion is subject to a number of limitations.

Firstly, only the opaque aggregate score value calculated by the MyAnimeList website is considered. The value is a weighted combination of individual scores selected by different users who may apply varied scoring scales and criteria.

Secondly, not all users have watched and scored all the anime. Because of licensing and availability, as well as the simple question of time, it is essentially impossible to assume so. Therefore, each the scores will represent only a subset of all the users on MyAnimeList.

3 Analysis

3.1 Scatter Plot

All data points in the sample are plotted (see Figure 1). As the season value becomes greater, representing more recent seasons, the aggregate score values become more varied.

Since there exists a direct relationship between how recent the season is and the number of anime (see Figure 2), this is rather unsurprising. There does not appear to be any kind of strong relationship between the two variables.

3.2 Linear Model

A least-squares regression line is calculated and laid over the scatter plot (see Figure 3). The LSRL is represented by the equation $\hat{y} = -0.003x + 7.581$, where \hat{y} represents the predicted aggregate score and x represents the number of seasons since Winter 1980. The model predicts the score for anime that premiere in Winter 1980 to be 7.581. For every increase in the number of seasons since Winter 1980 by 1, the LSRL states that the aggregate MyAnimeList score will decrease by 0.003.

However, the r value of the model is 0.126, suggesting a minimal linear relationship between the MyAnimeList aggregate score and the number of seasons since Winter 1980 and the aggregate score. The r^2 value is 0.016, meaning that 1.576 percent of the variation in the score can be explained by the LSRL between the number of seasons since Winter 1980 and the aggregate score; the r^2 value indicates a very weak linear relationship between the two variables.

 $^{^{11}}$ See Appendix A.

The residual plot (see Figure 4) also suggests a weak linear relationship; the residuals are not in uniformly random scatter around the horizon.

Thus, no strong linear relationship between the variables is concluded.

3.3 Logarithmic Model

In addition to the linear model, a logarithmic model, using the transformation $x_{new} = \ln x$ was calculated for the data, where x is the explanatory variable. The model is represented by the equation $\hat{y} = -0.193 \ln x + 8.115$ (see Figure 5), where \hat{y} is the predicted aggregate score, suggesting that with every increase in the value of $\ln x$ by 1, the value of \hat{y} decreases by 0.193. It predicts that an anime released in Winter 1980 would have a score of 8.115.

The model has an r value of 0.102 and r^2 value of 0.010, meaning 1.049 percent of the variation in the aggregate score can be explained by the LSRL between the season value and the aggregate score.

for the linear model and logarithmic model are very similar. The correlation coefficients and coefficients of determination for both models suggest that they are both weak models.

3.4 Prediction

The correlation coefficients and coefficients of determination for the two models considered suggest that the logarithmic model is a slightly worse fit for the data.

Problematically, the data exhibits heteroskedasticity, meaning the variation in the response variable variable is nonconstant over the values of the explanatory variable. ¹² In the case of the data, the variation in the aggregate score values increases as the value for the number of seasons since Winter 1980 increases. As evidenced in the scatter plot, small values of the latter variable result in small scatter in the former variable, whereas large values of the latter variable yield large scatter in the former variable.

The presence of heteroskedasticity can be verified using the Breusch-Pagan test.¹³ The test was run using the ncvTest() function from the R package car.¹⁴ The output is shown below.

car::ncvTest(linreg)

- ## Non-constant Variance Score Test
- ## Variance formula: ~ fitted.values
- ## Chisquare = 90.26313, Df = 1, p = < 2.22e-16

The p-value result from the chi-squared test is less than 0.05; thus, the null hypothesis that the data is homoskedastic is rejected and heteroskedasticity is inferred.

Because of the heteroskedastic nature of the data, the predictive accuracy of the model likely decreases as greater explanatory variable values are used to predict the aggregate score for anime premiering in that season.

Nonetheless, an attempt will be made at using the linear model to produce both interpolative and extrapolative aggregate score predictions.

3.4.1 Interpolative Prediction

An interpolative prediction for the score of an anime released in Summer 1995, with x = 62, was made. The predicted aggregate score value is $\hat{y} = -0.003(62) + 7.581 = 7.385$, which is not too far from the scores of many anime that aired that season, though that cannot necessarily be attributed to the accuracy of the prediction.

3.4.2 Extrapolative Prediction

Often miscredited as the first television anime series, $Tetsuwan\ Atom$, more commonly known in the English-speaking community as $Astro\ Boy$, premiered on January 1, 1963. With x=-68, the linear model predicts that MyAnimeList aggregate score for $Tetsuwan\ Atom$ to be $\hat{y}=-0.003(-68)+7.581=7.796$. $Tetsuwan\ Atom$ has in reality garnered a lower score on the website of 7.23.

Another data point to extrapolate is perhaps the MyAnimeList aggregate score of some title released in the future. With x=280, the model predicts that the aggregate score for some anime premiering in Winter 2050 to be $\hat{y}=-0.003(280)+7.581=6.697$. However, the shape of the scatter indicates that the scores for anime in Winter 2050 would encompass a wide range of values.

3.5 Conclusions

One goal of the study was to examine if users in the MyAnimeList community on average have a higher opinion of older anime—those that might be considered "classics"—than more recent releases. While the linear model suggests a negative trend in aggregate scores over time, the overall change over time is minimal. Furthermore, it is difficult to attribute this strictly to MyAnimeList users' preference for anime from the 1980's and 1990's that many might consider as classics. The limitations of the data discussed previously apply. Particularly, it is likely and significant that newer viewers of anime have not watched at all or as many older anime. Another important factor is that anime has become and is becoming more mainstream, and production of it, more widepsread (and therefore having greater variation in quality);¹⁶ thus it makes sense that the variation in scores increases with time.

Besides the variation in MyAnimeList aggregate score being directly proportional to the number of seasons since Winter 1980 anime premiere in, there not does appear to be any kind of strong relationship between the values of the explanatory and response variables.

3.5.1 Further Research Possibilities

The study provided an example of data where definitive conclusions are not easy to derive from. Further research could be done to perhaps consider and capture the sentiment of written user reviews and other factors to more accurately examine the change in user perceptions of anime over time.
